Asian Journal of Traditional and Innovative Arts and Textiles (TIAT) has published academic articles for the 2nd year. This issue keeps on with academic, research-base and book review altogether 6 articles. These articles have their special interesting point of views on arts and cultures in various perspectives subjects.

The scholarly article titled "Mueang Pheng Ancient Community and Phra That Nang Phen in Phen District, Udon Thani Province" serves to elucidate readers about the significance of historical evidence leading to the study of community history and the utilization of such historical records.

The research-based article titled "New Year Woodblock Print: Folk Wisdom and Inheritance of Zhuxian Town, China" aids readers in recognizing the value of indigenous art that contributes to economic development.

The research-based article titled "Socialist Realism Sculpture in the Socialist Republic of Vietnam 1945-2017" effectively conveys the artistry of Vietnam during this period and highlights the interconnection of art and politics.

The research-based article titled "Influencing Marketing Mix on Wear Thai Fabrics Motivation of Youth in Educational Institutions in Surin Province" is a concise yet substantial contribution that emphasizes the integration of local textiles into the lives of children and adolescents, symbolizing the enduring future of indigenous art.

The research-based article titled "Approach to Community Welfare Management for self-reliance of Prue Kan Tawan-Aog Community, Prue Yai Sub-district, Khukhan District, Sisaket Province" serves as a powerful depiction of community welfare organization, a pivotal tool for local community development.

Last but not least, again, it is the concise book review 'Sakid-Khit Nakha of Udon Thani by Asst. Prof. Dr. Kulajit Sengna'. This book review reflects community development through cultural resources along the road connecting Loa and Thailand.

Asian Journal of Traditional and Innovative Arts and Textiles would love to express thankfulness to all article reviewers for their intensive and comprehensive recommendations and suggestions to enrich each article to meet international academic benefit.
