

Contributors

Chris BAKER is the Honorary Editor of the Journal of the Siam Society. Contact: chrispasuk@gmail.com

Ralph ‘Skip’ BOYCE was a career foreign service officer with the US State Department from 1976 to 2008 specializing in Southeast Asia. He served as US ambassador to Thailand from 2005 to 2007 and was US ambassador to Indonesia from 2001 to 2004. After retiring from government in 2008, he was Boeing’s president for Southeast Asia, based in Singapore. He retired in October 2021 and now lives with his family in Thailand. He obtained a Bachelor’s degree from George Washington University in 1974 and a Master of Public Affairs degree from Princeton University in 1976. Contact: skipboyce@gmail.com

Paul BROMBERG is the serving editor of the Journal of the Siam Society and a contributing editor to Arts of Asia magazine. He is the author of THAI SILVER and Nielloware (River Books, 2019). Contact: paul@bencharongcollection.com

Karen CHAVANICH has lived and worked in Thailand since 1970. She taught at Faculty of Communication Arts, Chulalongkorn University and the Chulalongkorn University Language Institute before spending nine years as Manager of the Flight Crew Training Center at Thai Airways and ten years as Business Development Manager for Baker & McKenzie. She then spent twelve years as a lecturer at Sasin Graduate Institute of Business Administration, acting concurrently as Director of the Management Communication English Program for eight years. Now retired from academia, she is Curator of Collectibles Corner, a private family gallery in Bangkok. She holds two degrees from Boston University’s School of Public Communication (B.S. Journalism, M.S. Public Relations) and an EMBA from Sasin Graduate Institute of Business Administration. Contact: Karen.Chavanich@gmail.com

John CLARK is Professor Emeritus in Art History at the University of Sydney where he taught for twenty-two years. He has written Modern Asian Art (Craftsman House and University of Hawai’i Press, 1998), Asian Modernities: Chinese and Thai Art Compared, 1980-1999 (Power Publications, 2010), which won the Best Art Book Prize of the Art Association of Australia and New Zealand in 2011, Modernities of Chinese Art and Modernities of Japanese Art (Brill, 2010 and 2013) and The Asian Modern (National Gallery Singapore, 2021). Contact: john.clark@sydney.edu.au

Graham H. DALRYMPLE is a researcher based in southern Thailand affiliated with the Muslim Studies Centre, Institute of Asian Studies, Chulalongkorn University, and is a

PhD candidate with the National University of Malaysia. His recent research has centred on the historical background and ethnic change in the Songkhla region, including investigating the emergence and demise of the Singora Sultanate. Future research will focus on a Sufi movement present within the Thai-speaking south, including Songkhla province. Contact: ghdalrymple@gmail.com

Pinna INDORF is an independent scholar. After two years in the Peace Corp in the Philippines working with the Presidential Arm on Community Development, she spent the next ten years in professional practice—nine in Thailand working with Dr Sumet Jumsai and then M.L. Tridosayut Devakul and one year in New York City working with Richard Meyer. Joining the University of Singapore (now National University of Singapore [NUS]) in 1977, she taught architectural design and history of Southeast Asian architecture for twenty-five years, while undertaking research focused on the relationship between culture and the language of architecture and related arts. She obtained a Bachelor of Architecture degree from the University of Texas at Austin in 1965 and a PhD from NUS in 1985. Contact: pindorf@sbcglobal.net

Søren IVARSSON is associate professor at the Department of History, Chiang Mai University. His current research deals with the role Scandinavian entrepreneurs played in the cultivation of capitalism in Siam in the early 20th century. His publications include Creating Laos. The Making of a Lao Space between Indochina and Siam, 1860-1945 (NIAS Press, 2008) and the edited volumes, Saying the Unsayable: Monarchy and Democracy in Thailand (NIAS Press, 2010) and Rethinking the Colonial State (Political Power and Social Theory, Vol. 33, 2017). Contact: smivarsson@gmail.com

Christopher M. JOLL lived and worked in Thailand for twenty years. He is a research fellow at Chulalongkorn University's Muslim Studies Centre and a research associate at Victoria University of Wellington's Religious Studies Programme. He is the author of Muslim Merit-making in Thailand's Far-South (Springer, 2011). He relocated to New Zealand in 2020. Contact: cmjoll@gmail.com

KHEMTHONG Tonsakulrungruang is a lecturer at the Faculty of Political Science, Chulalongkorn University. He works in the areas of constitutional law, the judiciary, and legal philosophy, especially on the topic of Buddhist constitutionalism. He has published articles in various journals and book chapters on these topics, including: Constitutional Courts in Asia (Cambridge University Press, 2018), Routledge Handbook on Contemporary Thai Politics (Routledge, 2020), and Thai Legal History (Cambridge University Press, 2021). He is also a regular contributor to blogs on constitutional law and Thai politics, namely New Mandala, East Asian Forum, and I.Connect. Contact: khemthong.T@chula.ac.th

Gregory KOURILSKY is Associate Professor at the École française d'Extrême-Orient (EFEO), and in charge of the EFEO centres in Bangkok and Yangon. He previously taught History of Thailand and Laos (2008-2009) and Lao Language and Literature

(2010-2013) at the National Institute of Foreign Languages and Civilizations in Paris. Between 2013 and 2015, he was a Research Fellow at the University of Bristol, England. He received his PhD in Religious Anthropology and History of Religions at the École Pratique des Hautes Études, Paris. His research focuses on how Buddhist populations in Mainland Southeast Asia have maintained religious and cultural identity despite intrusion of non-indigenous doctrines, ranging from Indian classical scriptures to modern Western law. His recent publications concern Pali literature and scholarship in 16th century Lanna (Northern Thailand), Buddhist legal texts of 16th century Laos, and filial piety in Theravada Buddhism. Contact: gregory.kourilsky@efeo.net

Paul MCBAIN is a lecturer at Thammasat University. He obtained his MA at the University of Chicago and his PhD in Religious Studies with a focus on Buddhism at the University of Pennsylvania. He currently undertakes research into Thai Buddhism via artwork and literature. His dissertation was on the journeying literature of Sunthorn Phu, Thailand's national poet, and he is working on a number of translation projects of Thai classical literature. Contact: mcbp@sas.upenn.edu

NAPON Jatusripitak is currently a Visiting Fellow in the Thailand Studies Programme at ISEAS – Yusof Ishak Institute, Singapore. He holds a PhD in Political Science from Northwestern University, a MA in Sociocultural Anthropology from Columbia University, and a BA in Economics and Asian Studies from Cornell University. His research interests include nationalism, democratization, elite politics, patronage, and clientelism. His doctoral dissertation, “The Politics of Giving: Patterns and Evolution of Patronage and Electoral Networks in Thailand”, explores change and continuity in how political parties and politicians in Thailand deliver special favors and material benefits to their constituents as a means of mobilizing their electoral support. Contact: napon.jatusripitak@gmail.com

PASUK Phongpaichit is Emeritus Professor of Political Economy at Chulalongkorn University and a Fellow of the Royal Society of Thailand. Contact: chrispasuk@gmail.com

SING Suwannakij has lectured on historiography, philosophy of history, and different approaches to history at Chiang Mai University, where he is an assistant professor. He has published book chapters and articles on the formation of the Thai state through reorientation of the senses and various material practices, such as through photography, film, and the systematization of papers and documents in the bureaucracy. His recent interests encompass a blend of history of emotion, history from below, and the formation of capitalism in Siam. Contact: sing.s@cmu.ac.th

James A. WARREN is a lecturer in the International Relations and Global Affairs programme of the Social Science Division, Mahidol University International College. He holds a PhD in History from SOAS University of London and is the author of Gambling, the State and Society in Thailand, c.1800-1945 (Routledge, 2013). His current research examines the role of the Thailand Tobacco Monopoly in the socioeconomic development of the kingdom from the mid- to late 20th century. Contact: james.war@mahidol.ac.th